THE CLASS OF 1968

of

Katahdin High School

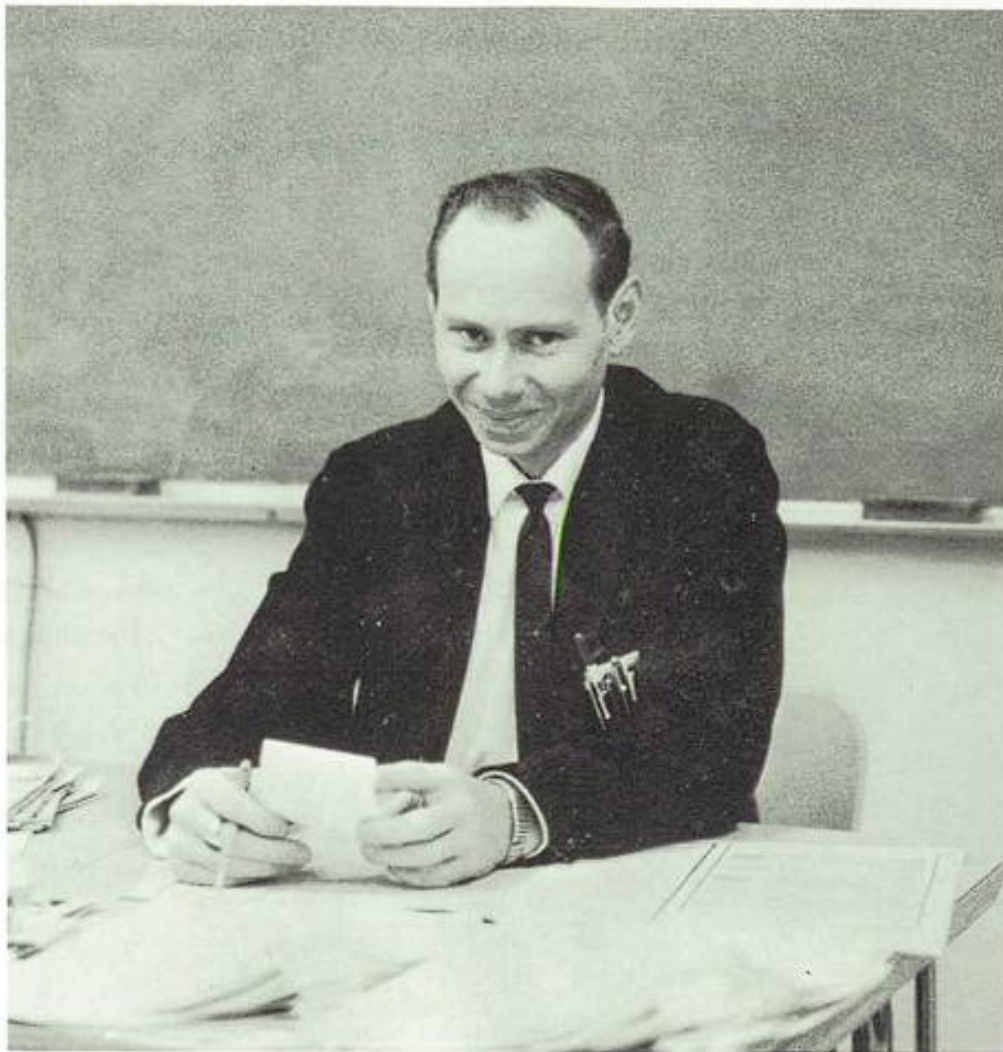

Proudly Presents

The First Edition

of

THE LAIR

Dedication

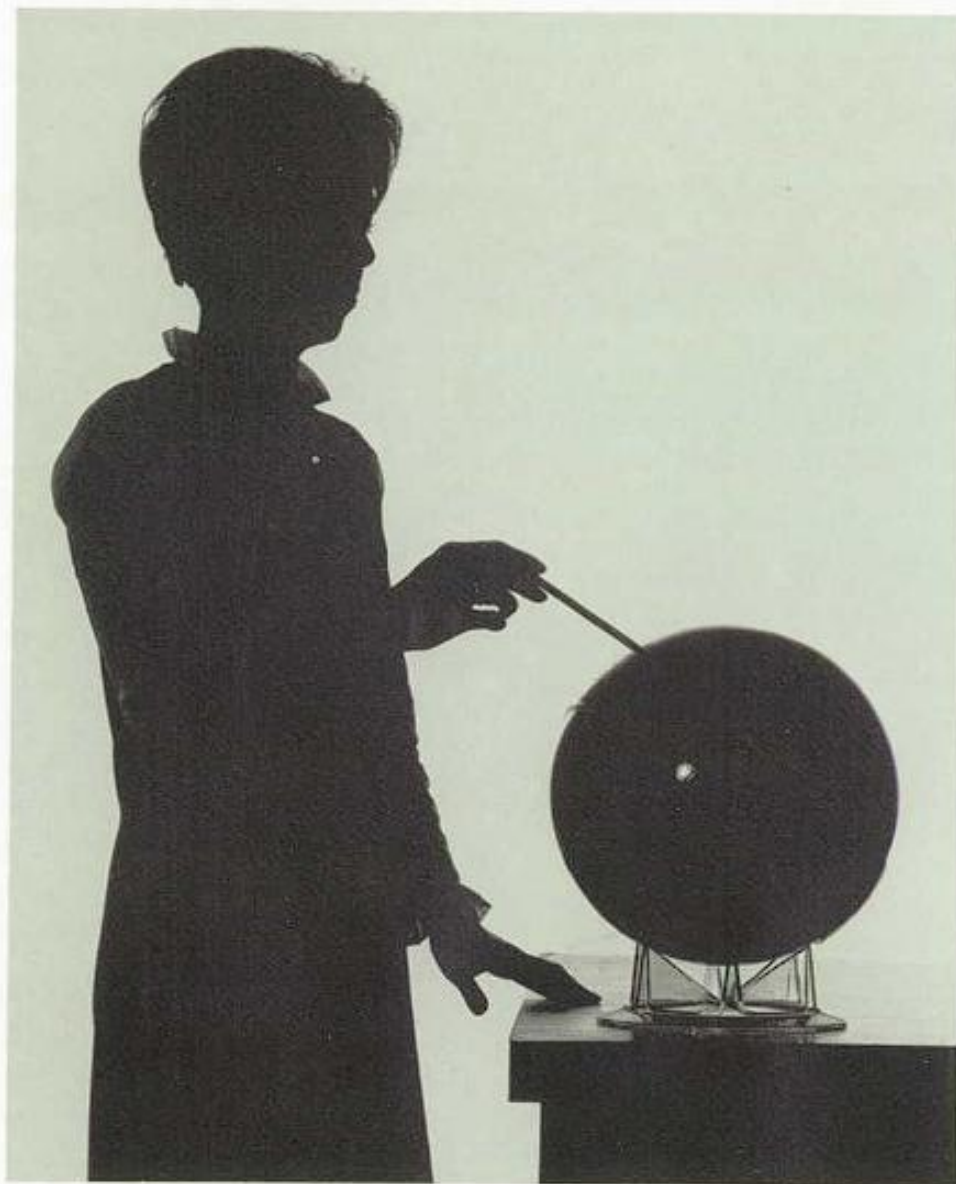

MR. JON FENLASON

We, the senior class of 1968, respectfully dedicate this first edition of the Katahdin Lair to Mr. Fenlason.

His POD classes not only brightened our day, but also gave us insight into some of the difficulties we will encounter in the outside world.

Mr. Fenlason attended Ricker College in Houlton and received a BA degree in Social Studies.

We wish to express our sincere appreciation for the help and insight that he has given us.

FACULTY

MEMBERS OF THE CLASS OF 1968

The first of any series of events is always thrilling. The first of The Lair is no exception. I am sure this book is filled with new ideas and better procedures.

May this year's graduates, and all those who follow, continue the traditions of success which have been so capably established by the members of the Class of 1968.

Sincerely,
A. HAROLD FENLASON
Superintendent

Messages To Seniors

I want to wish each of you happiness and success in the future. Life will have its ups and downs for you as it has for everyone else. It is the hope of your parents and teachers that you have prepared yourself in school so that the low points in your life will be few.

You are about to embark on the most challenging and demanding journey of your life. I hope that each of you will make a worthwhile contribution to your community, your state, and your nation.

You have the honor of being the first graduating class of Katahdin High School. I hope that you will have a strong allegiance to this school and that you will come back to visit often.

Best wishes.

SEARCH IN SPACE

The night is dark, the stars are bright,
The moon reflects but little light.
I scan the sky but cannot see
Another searcher scanning me.
All came about before my day
And likewise all will pass away,
So let us stay on earth's dear face,
Why dream about some alien place?
Across the fence the grass may grow tall
But on Mars and the Moon, none grows at all.

MAN OF THE WORLD

He walks with a smile strung upon his face,
He gives a handshake instead of an embrace,
But when he is in his own little place
things change and the smile fades from his face.
He becomes obsessed with worries and woes
And realizes they cannot go where he goes,
Because he's a man of the world.

After turning and tossing, he fades into sleep,
Knowing the next day he'll be back on the street.
He awakes and begins to put on his new face
this smile in the morning seems quite out of place.
He straightens his tie and goes out for the day,
Knowing that no one is in on his play,
Because he's a man of the world.

SHIRLEY GOULD

MY TOY CHEST

Not so many years ago, my whole life seemed to revolve around my toy chest. This rather large box held all my treasures, some of which were quite extraordinary. At the very bottom I put the things that I didn't want Mom to find. Among these were jars of snow, tadpoles, leaves, or lightning bugs, according to the season. Between the jars I placed the knife I had found in the garbage, and my forbidden caps and gun. Spread over these 'hidden' items were my doll clothes; next, of course, came my dolls. A various assortment comprised the top layer: coloring books, crayons, trucks, pretty rocks, etc.

Over the years I rearranged my toy chest many times. Gradually stamps and coins replaced the jars; Mother's old clothes and makeup became more interesting than guns; paint sets were more 'grown-up' than coloring books and crayons. How can I ever name all the precious items which made a home in my chest? To be sure, they are long gone, but my toy chest will never be empty. It is filled to the brim with memories.

THE FALLING LEAVES

Watching the multicolored leaves falling and swirling, I noticed that they had many characteristics of a human hand. Their many different sizes told of large men's, tiny children's, and delicate women's hands. The circulatory system of them produced a network of veins and when a gust of wind comes up, the finger-like projections seem to move as if playing an invisible piano. Wrinkled and wrought, the leaves seemed to tell of many long days of hard work. Then, when I picked one up and felt it, it felt like a new born baby's hand so delicate and soft. The bright red colors of the leaves reminded me of cold hands in the winter time. Crackling, the leaves sounded like a sharp movement of the knuckle in a hand.

As I turned to go, I felt the tap of a hand on my shoulder. I turned and looked, but it was only a falling leaf.

THE CHANCE

I am a young Vietnamese girl living in North Vietnam. My father carries on guerilla warfare in the jungles around us, and my three brothers are members of the Vietcong. My mother, sister, and myself live in a small hut near the center of our village. We busy ourselves by nursing the wounded men we may find in the immediate area.

My people have been very poor for many centuries, but this war brings upon us many more hardships. Though we have little to sacrifice, we give what we have willingly so that our men will keep good health. Besides giving up many of the bare essentials, we seldom experience pleasure.

All day long we work preparing food, helping the men, and with the shadow of night comes the noise of gunfire and bombs.

Last week I saw my first American. He was at the river with several South Vietnamese boys and I could not understand the strange tongue they spoke. His manner was as foreign as his words. He moved quickly, intelligently, and with assurance. His face was open and friendly, yet it held warning. Here was a man who knew that, should he be killed, the cause would not be lost.

I thought of my brothers and father who had to hide during the day and sneak at night. I saw their closed, tight faces. I felt the air of suspicion that was always about them. And I knew they didn't stand a chance against the American.

BARBARA ROBINSON

One of my favorite spots is a woods area during winter. This spot is especially beautiful during a soft snowfall. As I approach the woods, the brush at the edge of the woods is heavily loaded with a thick layer of furry snow, with only an occasional twig springing out. As I go further into the woods, the snow under my feet becomes deeper and looser. Each step I take is accompanied by the sifting of the snow around my boots. All around me are tall pine, fir, and spruce trees, each tree having a beautiful fur jacket over its bright green dress. The individual branches of the trees are bent toward the earth under a heavy load of snow, but this only adds to the majestic stature of the strong, silent trees. Flakes of snow are drifting slowly earthward, each crystal unique in itself. Looking off towards the deepest part of the woods, this snowfall blurs and softens the edges of the surroundings like a white veil falling over a bride's serene face. The whole area has an air of quiet tranquility; it is a place to think and reflect. Here I feel closer to God than anywhere else. I am reminded of how fortunate I am to see such a priceless example of God's mighty works.

DEBORAH HARRIS

THE MYSTERIES OF THE NIGHT

The night is black and still. The streetlight casts a hazy yellow glow as one peers from a window and silently views the foggy streets. Soon there is the lonely sound of the twelve o'clock train. The smooth roar creeps gradually, almost unnoticed. Steadily the "whirring" noise becomes louder and more fierce. Faster and faster the determined train comes until the small town is completely filled with the deep, eerie tone. Nothing can be heard but the harsh noise. The train whistles a muffled note to the wet, misty air. Minutes later the train cars are no longer visible and only a soft, low, hum can be heard echoing in the distance. Once again the black night is still and the small town resumes its usual peace.

BABIES--A BUNDLE OF JOY?

Some people refer to babies as being a "bundle of joy", but I most certainly do not always agree with them. After living with a baby for about three months now, I think I can give a couple of examples to back up my statement.

As we all know, babies do cry. Crying part of the time is supposed to be good for a baby, it gives him exercise, but who, may I ask, likes to listen to someone exercise like that at two o'clock in the morning? Where is the joy here?

Baby isn't "joyful" only at night, he "spreads joy" during the day, too, but only when Mother is busiest. When she has the washer going, floors to wash, and dinner to put on the table, the baby starts playing his "happy tune". It isn't pleasant for dear Mother; and it certainly isn't pleasant for anyone who happens to be near her, either. Oh Baby; if only you could see the happiness you are creating!

A baby not only makes noise, he makes messes, too. Feeding him his cereal is like trying to stuff the lava back into a still-erupting volcano. He won't eat, he will only blow bubbles; he succeeds only in getting cereal all over himself, the furniture around him, and the person feeding him. These are only a few of the reasons why babies are not always a bundle of joy.

BETTY GOULD
Junior

The cake sitting on the table in front of me looked so delicious that I felt I could eat the whole thing myself. It was a freshly baked chocolate layer cake with mounds of thick, creamy frosting. The frosting was piled on the cake so thick that in several places it ran down the side onto the platter. The cake was so light that I felt it would float away if the frosting were removed. The cake was so beautiful that I hated to cut into it. But my hunger got the best of me before too long, and I cut a huge slab of the cake. Its beauty was matched only by its taste. The chocolate was tastier than a pile of chocolate bars. The frosting was better tasting than ice cream on a hot day. This cake was truly fit for a king. As I took another piece of the cake, I decided that it was the best one I had ever eaten.

DENNIS MAIN

Snow was falling on the day I decided to go for a walk through the woods on the old path. I went alone, because I was tired of being near people. In the fresh snow I could already see rabbit tracks, probably a young one frightened by my approach. But suddenly, I was startled to notice a very large set of cat tracks right beside those of the rabbit. These, I figured, were of a bobcat because they were far too large to be those of a housecat. Walking on a little further, and hoping that the bobcat wouldn't catch the rabbit, I almost missed the amusing sight to my left. A young bull moose, most likely in his first winter, was coming across the ice of the lake. He was sliding all over the place like a child just learning how to skate. His long legs looked like deformed candlesticks and were going in different directions at the same time. This I thought was so funny that I laughed aloud, scaring the poor creature half-to-death. In his excitement, he fell right flat on the ice. His immense weight cracked the ice, which increased his fright, and stumbling to his feet, he half ran and half skated toward the woods, falling once more before gaining footing on the bank. Above my laughter, I heard a branch snap to my right and turning, I saw the most beautiful deer I had ever seen. His rack of horns spread out like branches of a tree and as he came nearer, it seemed like his antlers were big hands reaching after me. He came a few steps nearer and then turned to return the way he had come.

It was getting dark now, and my tracks were almost covered by the snow which was still falling. I reluctantly turned and went home.

"The Line Of No Resistance"

Under the direction of Miss McGinley, the play, "The Line of No Resistance" was performed so well that it overcame all opposition both at Katahdin High School and all other schools in the Katahdin Valley League. These victories enabled the cast to bring in the first trophy of Katahdin High School. The winning cast included Beth Garnett, Shirley Gould, and Dana O'Neal.

The Rod and Gun Club is a new club organized for the first time this year with Mr. Wilson as advisor. The club meets once every three weeks in the Vo. Ag. classroom. Twenty-five students make up the membership. We are presently exploring possible functions and purposes of the club and have plans to engage in some of the following events:

Rifle shooting matches; Turkey Shoots; Fishing and Hunting trips; Hikes-cookouts; camping trips; tying flies; loading ammunition; fly casting contest; snow sliding trips; snow shoeing trips; skeet shooting.

We also plan to work daily with the State of Maine Fish and Game Department to organize National Rifle Association Hunter Safety Classes.

On Feb. 27, we had Mr. Francis Dunn in as a speaker to give a talk and show slides on "Deer Yarding in the Winter." Most of the members were quite interested in this topic and some plan to go out with Mr. Wilson and Mr. Dunn to locate some deer yards this winter.

The yearbook staff wishes to thank Mr. Frank for his help and guidance in editing Katahdin's first yearbook. His cooperation and leadership have made a big job smaller.

We also wish to express our appreciation to the members of the senior class--Anna Qualey, Pearl Bossie, Cheyenne Cyr, Ruth Marr, Adelle Cole, Vicki Bates, Bobby Grant, and David Irish--who helped us meet our deadlines.

In the first basketball season the Katahdin H. S. girls team came up with an envious 17-0 record. The enthusiasm was tremendous and the girls worked hard throughout the season. Only three seniors are on the team. And the remainder of the squad provides a good nucleus for the "68-69" team.

In Memoriam

RONNIE LIBBY

In the fall of 1967, we lost a good friend and classmate in an unfortunate automobile accident.

We wish to say that although he was unexpectedly taken away from us, we will always remember his jovial personality and contagious good humor.
